

ABSTRACT

A pitch and putt lawn golf game that may be played by persons of all ages, golfers and non-golfers alike, and includes a series of hole markers and a golf ball, a putter, and a wedge for every player playing the game. Alternatively, the game may also include a set of irons in place of or in addition to the wedge, and/or a scorecard and pencil or other marking device. To play the game, a golf ball is pitched and putted through a series of hoops, just as a series of holes is played at a golf course. There are many benefits of the game: ease of play; teaching the rudimentary skills of golf; refining a player's short game skills; short time required to play a "round"; the ability to be used on virtually any lawn; flexible course layout; challenge; portability; requires no holes to be cut in the lawn; and the ease of setting the game up and taking the game down.